As companies grow, the founder or COO who used to handle hiring, payroll and people issues personally runs out of hours. Recruitment slows down, onboarding differs from hire to hire, and payroll questions land back on leadership's desk. None of this happens because the company stopped winning business. It happens because the people function never scaled with the revenue.

01 Signs your company has outgrown ad-hoc HR

If more than one applies

- [ ] Vacant roles delay growth, while rushed hiring brings in underqualified employees.
- [ ] Every new hire gets a different onboarding experience.
- [ ] Payroll or benefits questions still land on the founder.
- [ ] No regular performance reviews, so disengagement and turnover rise.
- [ ] Employee issues get resolved informally, if at all.
- [ ] Headcount is growing faster than the HR structure.
- [ ] In-house HR generalists can't cover the full HR spectrum, so key functions get overlooked.

02 Where companies typically get stuck

Three things that break first

Pressure point	What happens
Hiring speed vs. hiring quality	Under deadline pressure founders hire whoever is available, and turnover climbs back within the first year.
Payroll accuracy at scale	What worked manually for 10 people breaks quietly at 20 to 50; errors surface as compliance risk, not admin headaches.
No one owns retention	Without a dedicated performance and engagement cycle, exits happen reactively instead of being seen coming.

03 In-house HR hire vs Talent360 HCM

Side by side

Aspect	In-house HR hire	Talent360 HCM
Who you get	One or two generalists handling everything	A dedicated People Advisor, a People & Business Partner, a People Operations team for payroll and insurance, and Head Office support
Coverage	Hard to cover the full spectrum; key functions get overlooked	7 functions run as one system: recruitment, onboarding, benefits, performance, employee relations, payroll, personnel administration
Cost	Several salaries to build an in-house team	Up to 45% lower HR operating cost than building an in-house team
Continuity	If the person leaves, you start hiring again	Advisor replaced within 30 days at most, with a full handover, as a contractual commitment
Flexibility	More capacity means permanent hiring	Scale resources up or down as the business changes
Expertise behind it	One person's experience	80+ consultants, 300+ clients across 30+ industries in Saudi Arabia
Leadership's role	Payroll and people questions come back to the founder	We attend executive meetings and advise, with one partner for daily HR and compliance

Employer tip

We are not a generic HR outsourcing vendor but a specialised People Management Solutions firm, from workforce planning to daily operations, with no subcontractors and no coordination gaps.

04 The operating model: who does what

A clear role for each side in every function
